

PRAY THE NEWS

Protests have spread across Iran, driven by economic hardship, political frustration, and long-standing grievances.

The government has responded with lethal force, mass arrests, and a sweeping internet blackout, making it harder for families to find loved ones, for medics to work safely, and for the world to see what's happening.

Public debate often collapses into extremes: intervention or indifference. But Christian faith calls us to a different response — one that names abuse, defends life, and resists injustice without becoming violent.

This is not about regime change by force, but protecting people. Restoring communication. Upholding rights. When violence becomes normalised — or consumed like spectacle — it is civilians who suffer most.

Let us choose empathy over escalation. Let us remain consistent, compassionate, and committed to the dignity of those caught in the middle.

TODAY, WE PRAY THE NEWS FOR IRAN.

- We pray for the protection of civilians across Iran, especially those protesting peacefully, those detained, and those providing medical care under pressure.
- We pray for wisdom and restraint among those in authority, that they may choose paths that uphold life and dignity rather than deepen fear and violence.
- We pray for the international community, that responses to Iran would reject both indifference and militarisation, and instead prioritise humanitarian principles, nonviolent pressure, and protection of the vulnerable.
